DID YOU KNOW?
Cold-in-place recycling has become a common method to rehabilitate city streets.

THE CITY OF APLINGTON faced a problem common to many smaller Iowa communities, a deteriorating street system and limited funding to correct the problem. The project engineer, Ryken Engineering, worked closely with Heartland Asphalt to provide a great deal of street work for the money.

After some 43,000 feet of concrete curb and gutter was installed, Heartland excavated the old roadway and recycled the old sealcoat streets in place. This recycled material was adjusted to grade and compacted to provide a base for the 2-1/2" asphalt overlay. Sixty-six blocks, about 80% of the residential streets, were completely reconstructed using 10,000 tons of asphalt. With the cost of over $1.2 million, the entire project, including new drains and storm sewers, required 12 months to complete.

"...The Heartland contact person went out of his way to be helpful whenever a design change was necessary..."

The result is a tremendous improvement in the overall appearance of the community
